It’s the second week of June, and you’ve just wrapped up your last final exam. You’re feeling great! Summer is finally here! While you probably have all sorts of fun and intellectually stimulating activities planned—vacation with family, travel abroad, summer research—you may not have given much thought to finding new scholarships. Remember the fall quarter will be here again before you know it, and the summer is an excellent time to get a jump on those early September/October deadlines!

Here are some concrete steps you can take starting in the middle of June:

1) Build some time into your weekly schedule to find scholarships. If you haven’t done so already, now is a great time to create a profile on one of our favorite scholarship databases, www.scholarshipexperts.com. During the school year, we suggest setting aside a minimum of one hour per week to search scholarship databases, Google creatively, sift through potential scholarship applications, and work on personal statements and other scholarship materials. In the summer you can devote more time, so why not devote at least two hours a week?!

2) Look for summer deadlines. Sure, the majority of scholarship applications are due between January and April, but there are plenty of deadlines outside of those months, with some falling in the summer. Keep your eyes peeled for summer essay contests in particular!

3) If you’re going to be in Los Angeles for all, or part, of the summer, come to the Scholarship Resource Center in 233 Covel Commons for help with your application materials. Our summer hours are Monday through Friday, 12:00 p.m.—5:00 p.m. We will be happy to help you with all aspects of the scholarship application process.

If you still have questions, please feel free to call us at (310) 206-2875 or visit us at the SRC. During the spring quarter, we’re open Monday through Friday from 11:00 a.m.—6:00 p.m.
Where do International and AB540 Students Find Scholarships?

By Mac Harris, SRC Staff

Here’s the quick answer—drop by the UCLA Scholarship Resource Center in 233 Covel Commons any time during our office hours, which are Monday – Friday from 11 am to 6pm. Typically, we at the Scholarship Resource Center recommend online scholarship search engines as the best starting point for U.S. citizens seeking scholarship opportunities. However, those search engines typically do not help international and undocumented students nearly as much as they do U.S. citizens, since many of the essay contests found through those search engines exclude international and undocumented students from eligibility.

Instead, we encourage international and undocumented students to make use of special resources that our staff has assembled at the SRC office in Covel Commons. We have a handout entitled “Resources for International and AB540 Students” that includes links to a number of useful online resources, such as scholarship search engines that (unlike most search engines) do focus on international students and scholarship listings geared toward AB540 and non-citizen students. We also have a folder that collects printouts of various individual scholarship opportunities open to international and AB540 students, which our staff members have retrieved from Internet searches. A number of scholarship catalogues appear at the front of the folder, followed by a number of scholarships organized by due date. In the very back of the folder, we have a few general resources relevant to international and undocumented students (such as information about loans), as well as a final section of scholarships open to international and undocumented graduate students.

The Scholarship Resource Center’s website (www.scholarshipcenter.ucla.edu) also includes resources useful to international and undocumented students. From the home page, click on “Scholarship Search” and then click again on “International Student” to find a variety of useful links that include both scholarship opportunities and more general resources useful to international and undocumented students. Between our handout, our scholarship folder, and our online resources, international and undocumented students will find more than enough at the UCLA Scholarship Resource Center to initiate a successful scholarship search.
How do I apply for summer financial aid?
In addition to completing the FAFSA, you must also complete the online Summer Financial Aid Application. The application and filing timeline will vary depending on the summer program for which you seek assistance. The UCLA Summer Session application is available on the UCLA Financial Aid Office website beginning April 1 (http://www.fao.ucla.edu/summer/Summer_Info.htm). The priority deadline for submitting the summer application is April 30 to be considered for all types of aid. If your summer application is filed after April 30, and/or your FAFSA is submitted after March 2, you will be considered as a late applicant and the types of aid available to you will be limited. Please refer to the summer guides (available under “Publications” on the UCLA Financial Aid Office website) for additional information about finding funding for summer sessions.

Is financial aid available for the summer?
Summer aid is available to newly admitted and continuing UCLA students enrolled in UCLA Summer Sessions, the College Summer Institute, Summer Sessions at another UC (cross-campus enrollment) or the UC Summer Travel Program. You can only receive assistance for ONE summer program. As of the Summer of 2012, financial aid is no longer available for Non-UC Study Abroad programs.

What type of aid is available during the summer?
On-time applicants (that is, those who submit their FAFSA and/or the summer application by the due date) will be considered for the same types of awards during the summer as during the academic year: Federal, State, and University Grants; Federal Perkins and Direct Loans; and Work-Study (for some programs). Late applicants (those who submit their FAFSA and/or the summer application late) will be considered for Federal Pell Grants and Direct Loans only. Please refer to the summer guides (available under “Publications” on the UCLA Financial Aid Office website) for additional information about finding funding for summer sessions.

Anna LaPlaca is UCLA’s new winner of the YMA Fashion Scholarship Fund (FSF) award, a $5,000 merit-based national scholarship that includes a fashion-industry summer internship. Here, Anna offers insight into the FSF application process.

What is your major? What motivated you to apply for the FSF Scholarship?

I switched my major a few times during my freshman year, but I am currently on track to apply to the Communications major this summer. My minor is in Italian. I’ve always had a strong interest in the fashion industry and the creative side of the business, so when I switched my major track to Communications, I also made the conscious decision to pursue a career in fashion journalism, marketing, or editorial work. I starting interning with fashion PR firms, writing for www.CollegeFashionista.com, and I joined a couple of fashion-related clubs on campus. When I heard about the FSF Scholarship, I knew I had to apply because it’s such a unique opportunity, especially for UCLA students. I wanted something that would connect me to the fashion industry, and that is exactly what the FSF Scholarship does. For UCLA especially, which doesn’t offer fashion industry-related courses of study, there’s no doubt that this scholarship is the absolute best way to create a future career for yourself in fashion!

How does the FSF scholarship application process work?

The scholarship’s application includes a detailed case study of a fashion business or brand. You can either complete the Design side of the application or the Business side, which is the one I chose to do. The case study calls for the assessment and analysis of the brand across a diverse range of components. You need to have a creative mind to complete the Marketing Plan, but you also need to acquire knowledge of finance and economic terms to complete the Pricing Plan and SWOT analysis of the brand. The bottom line is, be as resourceful and detailed as possible in your responses.

What happens once you win an FSF Scholarship?

Once you are chosen as a scholar, you travel to New York in early January for the awards dinner, which is held at the Waldorf Astoria every year. The dinner is truly an industry event where many influential people come to network and meet the scholars who are essentially the next generation of the fashion industry. At this event, take advantage of every introduction and connection, because you never know who may help you land that dream internship or job. The next day is the Internship Fair where you hand out your resume and speak with HR representatives from a selection of FSF member companies. The goal is to land an internship for the following summer. Even if you don’t walk away from that event with an internship offer, your mentor will help you with the job search process.

Where can UCLA students who are interested in fashion find other students with similar interests?

I think it’s a common perception that because UCLA is primarily a liberal arts university, we don’t have a community of students passionate about this industry and serious about a career in it. My experience has been quite the opposite. This year, I became involved with the executive board for UCLA’s Fashion and Student Trends (FAST) student group, and I’ve met so many talented and creative people who share my career goals. I also work for Denizen Magazine, which is a wholly student-run fashion and lifestyle online publication, as their managing editor. These two clubs have provided me with a wonderful community of like-minded students and have allowed me the space to grow creatively. So essentially, if you’re interested in fashion, just look around a bit and you’ll find a whole community of students at UCLA who share a serious interest in this industry.

What advice would you give FSF applicants as they prepare their case studies for the 2015-16 application cycle?

Give yourself a lot of time to complete the case study! There may be terms that you’ve never seen before. Do some Google searches, ask friends, family members, professors, and TAs for assistance. My number one piece of advice is to be resourceful! You never know who may provide you with the knowledge you need to complete a certain component of the case study. My second piece of advice is to be detail-oriented. Flesh out all of your ideas. Think broadly at first and use others as sounding boards for your ideas. Once you’ve decided on a general track, think more and more narrowly until you can pinpoint exactly how you’d carry out each component that you are suggesting for the given brand or business in the case study. Be as specific as possible.

Finally, think outside the box and be creative. There’s nothing better than standing out with a unique vision. Above all else, don’t give up! This may be a long and grueling application process, and it’s likely you’ve never done anything like this before, but by completing the case study you’ll gain valuable business and analytical skills, things that are important no matter what you do. Just try to remember that you are applying because you have a serious interest in pursuing a career in fashion, and winning the FSF Scholarship will bring you one step closer to achieving that goal.

Getting an Early Start on National and International Merit Scholarships

By Francesca Marx, SRC Staff

EARLY DEADLINES
Have you ever dreamed of being a Fulbright recipient or a Rhodes Scholar and seeing the world? Why not try to make that dream a reality? There are prestigious scholarships open to students in every field of study. Above all else, the applications for these high-profile national and international scholarships require planning. While most scholarship deadlines fall between January and April, these deadlines are often in fall or early winter. That makes the summer a good time to get started on these kinds of applications.

GETTING STARTED
Many of these scholarships require institutional nomination — this means working with the UCLA Scholarship Resource Center and your academic advisor to prepare you to be an excellent candidate. So give us a call at (310) 206-2875 or visit our office (233 Covel Commons) to discuss your goals and to get started on the process.

SEPTEMBER
Some national and international merit scholarships due in September include the following awards: the Marshall Scholarship (www.marshallscholarship.org) is open to students in any discipline who want to study in Britain. And to study in Ireland, there is the Mitchell Scholarship (http://www.us-irelandalliance.org). The Rhodes Scholarship, for study at Oxford, is open to exceptional students in any discipline (www.rhodesscholar.org).

OCTOBER
The Churchill Foundation fellowship is for seniors or recent graduates in the fields of engineering and mathematics who want to study at Cambridge (http://winstonchurchillfoundation.org). For students in the arts, humanities, or social sciences, there is the Jacob K. Javits Fellowship for up to $30,000 to study in the US or anywhere else in the world (http://scholarshipcenter.ucla.edu/national_international/javits.htm).

NOVEMBER
Some prestigious awards due in November include the Ford Foundation Fellowship. This program seeks to increase the presence of underrepresented minorities in the nation’s college and university faculties by funding graduate study for students who show the greatest promise for future achievement as scholars, researchers, and teachers in institutions of higher education (http://scholarshipcenter.ucla.edu/national_international/ford.htm). Students interested in fashion should keep in mind the Fashion Scholarship Fund (FSF) award. This scholarship includes not only a substantial monetary prize but also an internship in New York or Los Angeles (www.ymafsf.org/about-scholarship/).

MORE SCHOLARSHIPS
For information on these and many other scholarships, please contact the UCLA Scholarship Resource Center at (310) 206-2875 or stop by our office (233 Covel Commons) in person. Our staff can help you identify awards for which you might be eligible and then help you create the most successful application possible. Take advantage of the summer months to get started on your dream of winning a prestigious national or international merit scholarship!
